SUPREME COURT.

Friday, 18th August.

IN CRIMINAL JURISDICTION.

BEFORE SIR F. T. PIGOTT (CHIEF JUSTICE).

WILFUL MURDER.

Cheung Fat was charged with feloniously, wilfully and with malice aforethought, killing and murdering Shek Kan at Shaikwan on the 20th June.

Sir H. S. Berkeley, K.C., Attorney General, instructed by Mr. G. E. Morrell (of the Crown Solicitor's office) proceeded, and Mr. H. G. Calhoun, instructed by Mr. P. W. Goldring (of Messrs. Brantley, Hett and Goldring), appeared for the accused.

Prisoner pleaded not guilty to the charge, and the following were empanelled as a jury:—A. Schmidt (born), W. H. Watson, C. M. Williams, W. J. Batley, A. Weil, A. J. McGill and J. Fisher.

The Attorney General—May it please Your Lordship and gentlemen of the jury, the prisoner stands charged with the murder of a girl named Shek Kan on the 20th June last. The murder is stated to have taken place somewhere on the waters of the harbour off Shaikwan. The facts as they will be exposed to you by witnesses will be shortly as follows:—The dead girl's parents own a houseboat at Shaikwan; they also had a passenger boat which the dead girl used to ply for hire. The prisoner was well known to the family, and had used the dead girl's boat on two or three occasions. The mother of the girl will tell you that on the 7th January of this year the prisoner came to her boat to see the girl, and asked on that occasion that the girl might come to live with him as his mistress; that she appears to have refused to do so partly owing to her mother, and on account thereof the prisoner made use of threats against the girl's life, and stated that she should die by his hand. The mother will tell you that this language frightened the girl, and for some time thereafter she was afraid, and refused to ply the passenger boat for hire. Again on the 19th and 21st of the same month it is announced by the mother that the prisoner returned to her boat and again urged his suit. The girl persistently refused him, and he again made use of threats against her. Some six months then passed during which time the family were apparently unmolested by the prisoner; but the mother tells us that on the 18th June last, the deceased having been free from the advances of the prisoner for some time, again commenced to ply the passenger boat for hire. On the 20th June, the day of the night on which we say she was murdered, the girl left the houseboat at nine o'clock and went towards the wharf for the purpose of plying the passenger boat. She was then wearing gold earrings and bangles. A witness will be called who will tell you that shortly after nine o'clock at night she saw three men, one of whom was the prisoner, hire the deceased girl's boat. We have it then that the prisoner and two other men shortly after nine o'clock went away from the wharf at Shaikwan in the deceased's boat. The next witness I shall call will be a priest of the name of Lai Yut, who will say that a little after 11 p.m. the same night, two hours afterwards, he saw three men, one of whom was the prisoner, get out of a boat at Shaikwan. Shaikwan, it will be proved by another witness, is the place where the deceased's boat was found floating empty. The priest subsequently identified the prisoner as being one of the three men whom he had seen leave the boat which turned out to be the deceased's. In the boat were found the earrings which were certified as those of the deceased girl who was wearing when she left the houseboat that night. There was no other trace of jewellery about. At nine o'clock on the following morning, a foreman of the shipyard at Quarry Bay picked the body of the deceased out of the water near that place. The body then had a tape tied round the mouth, presumably for the purpose of gagging, and all the jewellery the girl had on the night before was missing. As a result of the examination of the body to whom the body was submitted, he came to the opinion that death was caused by drowning. From information which the police had respecting the movements of the accused, he was arrested, and charged with being concerned in the murder. In answer to the charge the prisoner replied—"It is not I; I was sick. It was those two men." When asked if he knew who those two men were he said—"No, I don't know them." Prisoner accounts for himself by saying that at the time the woman saw him getting into the deceased's boat, he was playing cards at a house.

MARINE MAGISTRATE'S COURT.

Friday, 18th August.

BEFORE MR. BASIL H. TAYLOR (MARINE MAGISTRATE).

Constable Norman of the Water Police proceeded against the coxswain of the steam tug Tygar for failing to observe the rules of the road in the waters of the Colony on the 18th instant.

Constable Norman stated that on the 16th inst. he was going from east to west from Causeway Bay to Tsimshatsui, and was in the coal unloading when he saw defendant's launch on his port bow, showing her green light. He blew one long blast on his whistle, and as defendant did not take any notice he blew a second blast. Defendant still continued to take no notice until he was on top of the constable's boat, when he blew two short blasts, still maintaining his course, the boats then being little more than one boat's length apart, when he put his helm hard astarboard and they passed beam to beam about six feet apart.

His Worship convicted the defendant and ordered him to pay a fine of $10, in default 21 days imprisonment.

CANTON.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT).

TAX TO REPLACE FANTAN REVENUE.

I hear that Viceroy Shum intends to impose duties on all kinds of merchandise. The name of this new tax is (印花稅) Yan Fa-tai, or "flower seal duty." It is said that many officials have frequently recommended the enforcement of the Yan Fa-tai, but an Imperial Edict was issued last year ordering the suppression of all oppressive revenues, in consequence of which order the subject of the "Yan Fa-tai" tax had to be dropped. Lately an Expectant Prefect here has compiled a set of regulations and conditions of the "flower seal tax" which is said to have been very artfully drawn up. As His Excellency the Viceroy is anxious to suppress all gambling in the Kwangtung Province, a copy of the regulations has been sent to him for his approval, and there can be no doubt that he will take this opportunity to enforce the new tax as a substitute for gambling revenues. I was informed that yesterday Viceroy Shum gave orders to the Nam Hoi and Poon Yu Magistrates to take immediate steps to investigate and study the press and cons. of the regulations and to report their opinions on the matter, so that he may be able to enforce them at an early date.

I do not know whether this new tax will affect foreign goods or not, but if it does, I am afraid the Viceroy will have a great deal of uphill work to go through before he can successfully enforce it.

IMPORTANT OFFICIAL POSITION ABOLISHED.

On the 16th instant, the Provincial Treasurer of Kwangtung Province forwarded a despatch to the Commissioners of the Grain Tax, the contents of which were roughly as follows:—

I have received a despatch from the Board of Civil Office in Peking, requesting me to inform you that the Government has abolished the Grain Tax Office of the Kwangtung Province, and directing me to take over and perform the duties of collecting the grain tax of the province.

REMOVAL OF YAMEN PAPERS. Yesterday all official documents and papers relating to cases, &c., of the Governor's Yamen were removed to the Viceroy's Yamen. In future all public functions and transactions which hitherto have been performed by the Governor will be attended to by the Viceroy.

HONAM THEATRE.

Perhaps you are not aware that there is only one theatre building in the whole great City of Canton. Barring "Sing Song" houses and flower-boats, there are no other amusements for the millions of people here but the Theatre. Unfortunately, about two years ago Ng Lan Fong, one of the gentry of Honam, petitioned the Viceroy to suppress the evening performances. The reasons stated in the petition were that evening performances were dangerous to the neighbourhood; that the theatre being open throughout the night for admission, robbers and thieves would seize the advantage and make use of the place; and that also many disputes and quarrels were settled in the theatre at night. Whereupon Viceroy Shum ordered the prohibition of evening performances. The day performances did not bring in sufficient to meet the expenses for running the theatre, and eventually the owner closed the place altogether. He afterwards made repeated attempts to have the prohibition removed but was unsuccessful. Tong Sui Yuen has lately floated a concern called the Ming Shing Company to work the theatre. He has petitioned the Sin Hui Kok for permission to hold performances both day and night, and has offered the Government a very tempting sum as annual royalty. It is said that the matter was referred to the Poon Yu Magistrate, who has since made a very favourable report, and there is every likelihood that the theatre will be in full swing again in a few days.

ANOTHER SERIOUS REBELLION.

A serious rebellion broke out on the 9th instant in the Lo Loong Village, near the Loong Chuen City, in Wei Chien District. The rebels after plundering and killing all the civil, and military officers in the village, made preparations to attack the Loong Chuen City. The rebels have established their headquarters at Lo Loong Village. On the 10th instant the Loong Chuen Magistrate gave orders to close the gates of the City and posted brave men on the city wall to repel the assault. He also sent detachments and letters to the Wei Chien Prefect requesting help but they were intercepted and robbed by the rebels.

The people in the neighbouring city of Ho Yuen got wind of the rebellion and, fearing that the rebels might also attack the city, immediately wired (14th instant) to some of their countrymen who are merchants in Canton to at once report the matter to Viceroy Shum and request him to send soldiers to suppress the rebellion. On the 15th instant the Viceroy sent Colonel Li Moung Suit with two divisions of infantry.

THE RESOURCES OF SIBERIA.

PEITION OF JAPANESE TRADERS. A body of Japanese who are well acquainted with the fisheries of Siberia and the fishing grounds have petitioned the Government asking that mining and fishing concessions should be included in the terms to be presented to Russia, when fishing along the coast of Siberia, especially near the mouth of the Amur, was commenced some twenty years ago. The industry continued to grow until it was of such dimensions that more than one-half the fish demand of Japan was supplied by the fisheries of the Siberian coast. Gold dust and occasionally nuggets are also to be found on the coast and in the Amur valley, but no Japanese has yet had the opportunity of prospecting. Some Japanese traders, however, have carried on a profitable business in purchasing dust from the Russians. Therefore, it seems, the Japanese petitioners held that they have acquired a right to be considered in the peace terms negotiated.

THE LATE JOHN HAY AND THE FAR EAST.

The Harvard Courier says:—We have had secretaries of state before who have recognized the existence of the Far East, but we have never had a secretary of state until John Hay who recognized clearly and confidently that the nation of the Far East have the right to be as they are and to live where they do, subject of course to all the responsibilities going with these rights. The underlying assumption of his arguments and efforts to maintain the territorial integrity of China, and to secure impartial and non-committal relations between China and her commercial neighbors (commonly known as the open door), is that the inhabitants of China, notwithstanding their peculiarities of dress and speech and customs, are after all human beings just like ourselves, and that they have as good ground to object to us, because we are different from them, as we have to object to them, because they are different from us.

A YOKOHAMA SENSATION.

An anonymously written book of "Yokohama Yarns" has caused a sensation in that place. It describes the "smart society" there as an immoral lot of people; and it appears that everybody has been "fitting the cap" of the naughty characters on to the heads of actual residents.

Mr. H. J. Sharp, Manager of Kelly and Wulh, its publishers, was not inclined to discuss the book when seen by an Advertiser man.

"You might say, however," he finally said "that the sketches are only types and that the irritation they have occasioned is integrally absurd. I myself have known five or six Mrs. Masterfons in Yokohama, and the other characters in the book are as composite as this one. A much closer delineation of social Yokohama could be made by anyone who cared to undertake the task, and the result would undoubtedly be considerably more risqué than 'Yokohama Yarns.' The book on the whole is simply a freshhand outline of conditions which every old foreign resident of Yokohama is cognizant of."

The Advertiser seems to hint, by an otherwise unexplainable quotation from Gen-sis, that the writer was a lady called Adam. In an article on Society in Yokohama and other parts in the Far East, which appears in the Japan Advertiser, arising out of comments on the same book, our contemporary says that:—

In so small a community, where sooner or later everything is known by everybody, all legitimate social aspirations on the part of those accustomed to genuine society at home are smothered by indifference and contempt for what goes under the name here. The better people in this community stay at home and mind their own business, leaving intellectual resources of their own sufficient to compensate them for the deprivation of the social stimulus which they have found in other lands. All the same, the complete absence of anything deserving the name of society in Yokohama is greatly to be deplored, as the vital cause of such a book as that just published to be representative of the conditions prevailing in the community. Furthermore, it should be noted as the most disastrous outcome of some of the stupid changes which are here masquerading under the name of society, that young men arriving here, and finding no social stimulus or resources save those furnished by the bar-rooms, must needs be possessed of extraordinary strength of character if they avoid drifting into the moral maelstrom depicted by this unimpeachable book. Whether they succeed in getting into pseudo-society or are kept out of it they are almost equally to be pitied.

NO INDEPENDENCE FOR PHILIPPINES.

The Manila Columbian says:—It had been freely predicted that when Taft came he would justify the immediate organization of political parties and extensive agitation of purely political issues. Every man with a petty grievance or a wire to pull has looked for Taft to help his cause along, and every utterance has been eagerly waited for the work that would turn loose the winds of political strife and dissent.

But the word has not been spoken. Instead the Secretary has shown both his statesmanship and his honesty by saying in the plainest of terms that the Filipino people will not be ready for independence for several generations yet, and that all hopes built upon the misguided sympathies of a few ignorant people in the United States are vain. He declared openly that the agitation that has arisen since the return of the Honorary Commission is not only useless but postpones the date of real self-government.

He maintained the policy of "the Philippines for the Philippines" and showed that it would be false to the welfare of the Filipino people for the United States to grant a premature and disastrous independence. He endorsed Governor General Wright in most unmistakable terms, and supported the correctness of the principle of the internal revenue tax.

THE SALVATION ARMY AND JAPAN.

The Singapore Free Press has received the following letter:—

Dear Sir:—Apropos of your leading article of Tuesday last as to the proposed arrogant presumption of the Salvation Army, allow me to append a few characteristic lines by one who saw the Japanese in their true light as far back as thirty years ago:—

"And yet this is one of the countries to which our missionaries come to teach them our civilization and what we are in the West—how good we are—how gentle—how loving, clean and sober—how exalted are our methods of life—how high our aims!"

"Is it not wiser to teach men how to live, before teaching them how to die? The latter plan has been tried long enough; and of its failure the records of the world are unhappy by this time full enough!"

"It would be far more pertinent and far less impertinent, were they to send missionaries to England and America, to teach us what is the grand patent which makes them all so happy, so sober, so clean and loving to one another."

"When one thinks of our East end and the stupendous depths of degradation to which whole masses of our people of our very doors, have sunk, whose deplorable condition, both spiritually and bodily, so loudly calls for help, it seems at least odd that missionaries should be sent to a people who seem to need it far less than the multitudes of our people at home."

"Until our own festering sores are cured, should not every missionary be recalled and every farthing of the money which now leaves England for missionary purposes be applied to wipe out our own national disgrace?"

I append myself one of the (so called) HEATHENS.

Singapore, 19th August.

THE LATE JOHN HAY AND THE FAR EAST.

The Harvard Courier says:—We have had secretaries of state before who have recognized the existence of the Far East, but we have never had a secretary of state until John Hay who recognized clearly and confidently that the nation of the Far East have the right to be as they are and to live where they do, subject of course to all the responsibilities going with these rights. THE LOSS OF THE "CECILIE."

INTERVIEW WITH AN OFFICER. The fate of the Cecilie has been known as the Cecilie, chartered by Baron von Kriegstein, has already been recorded in our columns. Baron Kriegstein himself crossed the Straits of Tartary and when last heard of was endeavouring to make Harbin overland. Captain Paul Reimers, First Officer, Second Officer Anderson, and Chief Engineer Schmitt, of the Cecilie, have arrived in Yokohama, and the first named, seen by a representative of the Japan Advertiser, gave the following account of his experiences:—

"After they fought the Battle of the Japan Sea without us," said the Captain with a shrug of his shoulders, "I was called up to Kamshanka. Why? Oh, we needed a little recreation; we went up there to shoot bears and foxes. There are many bears and foxes in Kamshanka. Well, we stayed a week in Kamshanka, shooting bears and foxes as I said, and on June 13th we left the port of Petropavlovsk on the south-east coast of the peninsula. The Baron wanted to go to Nikolaievsk on the east coast of the Maritime Province, you know. Passing Cape Queen Elizabeth we encountered a field of pack ice which forced us to return, looking for a harbour in which to take refuge until the ice should be carried away. We discovered that harbours marked on the chart were so shallow that no passage into them could be had. After steaming about for a considerable time and being greatly in need of water for the ship, we shaped our course south over the west coast of Saghalien, hunting for a suitable place to take in water."

"The morning of June 27th the fogs which we had encountered frequently again closed around the Cecilie, and we struck a rock. Numbers 1 and 2 holds immediately filled and the ship sank. There was nothing to do but give up the ship. So we took everything movable to shore, a black, uninhabited place of rocks and forest, and there we built three shelters of logs where we could store our goods. Then we determined to go by open boat around Cape Putlovsk into Putlovsk Bay, where according to our charts an ocean telegraph was situated at a town called Tichmouner. With these two boats manned by our Chinese crew and commanded by myself, the Second Officer, and, of course, the Third Officer, we made 187 miles in three days, arriving at Tichmouner without incident."

"There we spent six days, it taking all that time to send five telegrams to Shanghai and receive answers. We telegraphed for assistance, of course, and it seemed that the German Minister at Tokyo, apprised of our plight, asked the Japanese Department of the Navy to come to our rescue. On July 19 the Japanese converted cruiser Yamaguchi commanded by Admiral Kuroki, arrived at the mouth of the river. A heavy storm prevailed for three days. We waited twice to reach the cruiser but our boats were nearly capsized by the heavy seas. On the third day the warship left. We were in despair until on July 23, when the weather calmed, the Japanese cruiser returned and we were taken on board. We were politely received and courteously treated."

"We earnestly requested the Captain of the ship to put back to the place where we had landed, but the Japanese Captain feared that the coast being very poorly charted he would be endangering his ship. He consented, however, to land us on the south coast of Cape Putlovsk, whence we travelled overland to the place where the Cecilie was stranded; we were accompanied by men and officers from the warship. After removing all our baggage and ship's instruments, which we had stored in the temporary shelter on shore, we left the Cecilie to her fate, and the jagged rocks and returned to the Japanese warship which brought us to Otaru on July 26. Thence the Governor paid us a visit of sympathy, and after thanking the officers of the Japanese warship, we left that place for Yokohama."

"But where is the Baron?" was asked of Captain Reimers.

"Ah, the Baron; we must not forget him," replied the Captain with a smile. "The Baron von Kriegstein believes that you cannot so much trust by sea. We were away down by Hongkong when the Battle of the Japan Sea was fought. So the Baron left us after the third day at Tichmouner and made his way to Alexandrovsk on the mainland. Thence he hoped to get to Nikolaievsk and thence overland to Harbin. He will probably get there in time. The Baron usually gets where he wants to."

BOYCOTT EXAGGERATIONS.

It is some time since Mr. Rosenstock of Manila, passed through Hongkong; so that in the following interview with a journalist in Japan, we conclude that he must have exaggerated considerably:—

"When I arrived in Hongkong," said he, "I was in need of some toilet articles which in my hurried departure from Manila I had neglected to pack in my trunk. I could not buy even a piece of American shaving soap at any Chinese shop. American-made collars and shirts were not to be had. All trade in Manila and American-made cigarettes had ceased utterly. A Manila cigar could not be had in a Chinese shop."

"When I arrived at Shanghai I found the same conditions extant. There the American merchants were in a state bordering on panic. The specific case of one man will serve to illustrate the condition. This individual has been for several years an agent of a patent electric belt made in America, which has been especially popular with the Chinese. In three years he made a comfortable fortune selling these electric belts. When the boycott was declared in Shanghai the orders for this commodity ceased at once, and he had a large consignment on hand that was a dead loss to him. Even a cert in total who had taken a belt on trial returned it immediately with the remark that he could not buy it under any circumstances."

WEATHER REPORT.

The Hongkong Observatory yesterday issued the following report:—

On the 18th at 11.45 a.m. The barometer has fallen on the China coast, particularly in the neighbourhood of Hongkong.

The depression in the China Sea is probably circular. It appears to be situated to the S.W. of Hongkong in about 19 deg. lat. and to be moving N.W.

Moderate S.E. winds may be expected in the Formosa Channel, and strong gales with rain over the N.W. part of the China Sea.

Forecast:—Fresh or strong E. and S.E. breezes; squally, showery.

COPPER COINS.

Chen Fu, Acting Viceroy of Liang Kiang, has submitted a memorial setting out the evil of circulating copper coins in the provinces.

The minister of copper coins in the provinces was accordingly asked for the relief of monetary distress and it is by no means for gain. The original value of copper coins is less than that of the coin, this difference representing an enormous profit. More mintage machinery has been obtained and the output of coins has been increased. The profits so obtained represent a substantial gain for the execution of such reforms as are in want of funds, and even the Lion King Chu depends greatly on this source. It is good if this is done properly, but as the coins increase, their value decreases. According to the estimate of a modern financier, the output capacity of a modern mint in China is 10,000 millions of copper coins yearly, which equals 164 millions of dollars of cash. This will effect a great fall in the price of the copper coins, and damage trade. All the provincial authorities comprehend this fact, but simply on account of the demand for reforms and military organization, they adopted such methods reluctantly.

At present, owing to the depreciation of the value of copper coins, the profits of mintage have become much less. The large charge of the mints takes no consideration of the quantity already in circulation and think only of the ways and means of disposing of the coins in other provinces, which hastens the fall in price. In the interior parts of the provinces, no copper coins are used, which is quite contrary to the original intention, the relief of the monetary crisis, and unforeseen damage to trade will ensue. The interior has not received any benefit and the shipping ports have sustained disadvantage by the copper coinage. For instance, there are in Kiangnan three mints viz. Nanking, Soochow and Chingking, the output of copper coins being sufficient for use of the province, while there are in Shanghai, Chinkiang and other places, agencies established for the supply of Kwangtung, Hupai, Chikiang and Fukien. On account of this, copper coins have fallen in value; formerly 1,300 cash were worth one tael, and now one tael can get 1,400 cash. For the dollar one used to get 84 or 85, but now 99 or 97 cash. The principal income of Kiangnan is derived from land grain and salt taxes and like on all kinds of goods, which are all paid in cash and converted into taels for remitting to the Treasury. Once the value of cash falls, this loss in conversion is very great. The claims for the payment of indemnity and military expenditure can hardly be met.

Humorists have suggested that orders be given to the provinces where mintage exists that each province shall mint and use its own copper coins and not be allowed to trade on such coins in other provinces. The Viceroy and Governor can use their judgment in this matter, if one province is in want of coins, deputies may be sent to other provinces for a further supply. Now, Shanghai and Chikiang have already prohibited imports from other provinces, and the ministerial asks for the same right for Kiangnan.

The Financial Department and the Board of Revenue were ordered to consider and report.

HONGKONG TO BE RESTORED TO CHINA?

The Atlantic Monthly says:—The era of aggression, exactions of so-called indemnities, and arbitrary seizures of territory, will be ended, but it is of much more importance that the right of self-determination be established in all lands. The right of self-determination, and stay out. Further than this, the czar must awake in a new and abundant dream of empire upon the Pacific coast of Asia, at least so far as absorption of territory to the south of his present possessions there is a part of it. In like manner, France must cast aside that recit of schemes of loss, secret in her imagination, but patent to all the rest of the world, the scheme of negotiation of the entire southern tier of Chinese provinces, by which she has hoped to rival Great Britain in her Indian empire, to put a French block between India and China, and thus end the British plans of open trade routes for opium and other English commodities, routes available to English commerce only. Germany will recognize the limit to any further expansion of her empire at China. She will not China, Great Britain will double her naval power, seized by her when Russia took possession of Port Arthur, to its rightful owner. And it is not beyond the bounds of belief that Hongkong, for years the greatest smuggling depot in the world, may eventually be given back to China, from whom it was wrested at the conclusion of the first Opium War.

CHILDREN OF FAR CATHAY.
A SOCIAL AND POLITICAL NOVEL.BY
CHARLES J. H. HALCOMBE,
MEMBER OF CHINA REFORM PARTY.
Author of "The Mystic Flower Land,"
"Travel in the Transvaal," &c., &c.(Continued from last Saturday.)
CHAPTER XII.—THE MISSIONARY AND THE STUDENT.

Next morning Cheng was up betimes and accompanied Mr. Poi over his broad and fruitful lands, in which many contented husbandmen were toiling and singing; and then, for a good breakfast, he bade the genial farmer good-bye and once more resumed his journey.

As he seemed to have enjoyed himself as much as his master, and now again smacked his lips or munched some expressive ejaculation as he looked regretfully back and thought of all the good things he was leaving behind.

After descending the southern slope of the hill, they entered a fertile plain where the sun shone in a glittering stream, fields of rice, millet, sugar-cane and beans, and fruit-laden orchards whose trees bent beneath the weight of luscious whelping luscious and other produce of the teeming soil.

They had been travelling for an hour or two, when Cheng suddenly heard the clattering of hoofs from behind and, on looking round, saw a foreigner, mounted on a white horse, quickly approaching from the northward. It was Montrose, who had left Lien at four o'clock the morning before.

As the Englishman, caught up with the two travellers, he reined in a little so as to moderate his pace. The young student at once recognised him as being the unfortunate missionary he had saved from utter annihilation at the hands of the last remnants of the mob, when the former was lying insensible in the market place.

Cheng, who had been looking at him with all his inherent distrust and prejudice against the foreigner, now turned to him with a friendly smile, and he presented to him his fellow traveller, who had turned off a little to the left to avoid coming into contact with him.

Montrose had no idea who this grave, handsome young Chinaman was; still he felt friendly towards him, and drawing rein, gave the usual salutation by asking whether he had eaten rice.

Cheng answered shortly though politely, plainly showing, however, that he was not inclined to be communicative, while Ah Sam kept close to his master and suspiciously eyed the intruder. "But Montrose was accustomed to these proud and haughty Celestials," and rather admired the young fellow for his manly, independent bearing.

"May I inquire," said Montrose, speaking in Cantonese, "what your honorable name is?"

"My humble name is Hung Fong Cheng," answered our precocious friend, not returning the compliment by inquiring the name of his interrogator.

"I presume you are a native of Lien?" said Montrose, regarding his companion attentively.

"Yes, sir," responded Cheng with great dignity.

"Are you travelling far?"

"To Canton."

"Then we are both bound to the same place," said Montrose cheerily. "Have you been there before?"

"No? I have not."

"Then you are not acquainted with the route?"

"No, I am afraid I am not," said Cheng, regarding his friend in a friendly tone.

"Oh, yes," replied Montrose in a friendly tone. "I rode all the way from Canton to Lien, and, on arriving there, received such a agreeable reception from your townspeople that I am journeying all the way back, though under no wise compulsion."

"Cheng could hardly refrain from smiling at Montrose's quiet, satirical allusion to his own terrible experience."

"Why do you missionaries expect your lives for the sake of preaching your religion to the people of China?" he asked, adding with calm assurance, "Nothing will ever change our religious convictions which form the basis of our home life."

"We come to tell of the one true God: the Father and Son and Holy Spirit," said Montrose. "But if your so-called religion forms the basis of your home life, what forms the basis of your religion?"

"Filial piety," answered Cheng which dogmatic solemnity.

"I cannot help thinking," said Montrose, "that you carry filial piety to an absurdity; for your great sage, Confucius, even recommends a son to kill himself for his father's sake."

"Filial piety is the duty of the Emperor of China upon the throne," replied Cheng with ill-concealed obsequiousness, his face flushing. "It is a far-reaching protective arm, for, after strengthening the home, it goes forth even to the Dragon Throne, and—if he be worthy of it—embraces the Emperor, who is regarded as the earthly father of all children, and the Son of Heaven. As Confucius says, 'a family is the prototype of the empire,' and thus the empire is considered by filial piety."

Cheng, who was evidently dissatisfied to Cheng, so he changed it by asking his companion to explain to him the constitution of the English Government. Montrose did so, entering into and thoroughly expounding every detail of consequences.

Cheng listened attentively and, when he had thoroughly grasped the subject, said, "I do not like your administrative system, which is founded to a great extent, upon hereditary right and precedence. In China moral and intellectual merits are the only things which will help a man to gain political fame and position; whereas it seems that the son of an English peer succeeds to his father's seat in Parliament—perhaps to the exclusion of a wiser and more competent man. Here, honours are bestowed on the basis of birth, and the son of a noble is to have posthumous titles conferred on him by his ancestors for several generations, and notwithstanding the power and wealth my father might possess, I could never gain official standing otherwise than by my own rectitude and perseverance in studying, living correctly, and taking my degrees."

"In your country," he continued, "the poor, though wise and worthy, must remain in that sphere of life into which he was born, unless he enjoys exceptional advantages for promotion; and even then, it appears, he is handicapped from the commencement by class distinction and a proud aristocracy. On the other hand, in this country the lowly-born man—providing his family is moral and respectable—may possibly rise by his own exertions to become an Imperial Councillor, and a member of the House of Commons, for probity and learning are accorded the respect and acknowledgment due to them."

"Yes," he added, "religion and politics are inseparably united by all the traditions we hold most dear. Is it so in your country?"

"I am afraid not," said Montrose.

"Are your countrypeople all influenced by the same religious convictions?"

"Practically the same," answered Montrose, "only under various denominations."

"I mean, are you all members of one church?"

"No, our opinions differ regarding certain dogmas and ceremonies."

"That is bad," said Cheng, "for if there is religious difference, there must be political difference and party strife. Do your religious principles coincide with your scientific ones?"

"No, I am afraid they will never become reconciled to one another."

"Ah!" exclaimed Cheng, with proud conviction. "Confucianism and Buddhism are founded upon scientific principles—upon the wonderful laws of spiritual evolution—the Yang and Yin of the Tao-kiang, which embrace all things, even the atoms of dust upon which we tread. With us, religion is our political ruler, and Confucius may well be called our invisible Prime Minister."

Montrose was much interested in the conversation, as it revealed to him the workings of the Chinaman's mind; but he reserved his arguments for another time, hoping to become better acquainted with the young student, in which case his words would have more weight and would be listened to with less prejudice.

At mid-day they rested awhile beneath the drooping foliage of a banyan tree, and Montrose drew from his satchel some rice-cakes, and handed a couple to Cheng, who was about to take them, when Ah Sam, regarding the foreigner with angry suspicion, cried out, "Don't touch those cakes!"

"Whereupon Cheng drew back his hand, at the same time making a polite excuse."

After some light refreshment, the travellers mounted their ponies and pushed on at a brisk pace, for heavy clouds were rising from the southward, threatening a tropical storm, and the nearest town of Yang-chau was some miles ahead.

The light wind gradually died away, being succeeded by a period of oppressive calm, and the atmosphere became thick and heavy; while the voices of birds, the lively scissor-grinding of cinders, and the deep bass notes of bullfrogs became hushed, as if they awaited in expectant silence the impending storm.

Our friends had not proceeded far, however, when a sudden flash of lightning lit up the sky, and was followed by a tremendous clap of thunder, like the hurrying of a host. Then a succession of flashes and crashes rent the sulphurous air.

Montrose noticed that at every report Cheng reverentially bowed his head low over his horse's neck; and, on asking him the reason of this, he replied: "I do this to pay proper homage to the God of Thunder. He, even, is offended with some person in this neighbourhood who has secretly committed a crime, and he, as he is surely being struck; for the gods always avenge the hidden wrong against heaven."

"You speak," said Montrose, "as if the thunder killed, and not the lightning."

"And so it does," said Cheng, with a look of pitying contempt for this foreigner's ignorance. "The Goddess of Lightning throws a flash from her mirror upon the guilty wretch, thus revealing his whereabouts to the God of Thunder, who at once casts his destroying bolts which makes those terrible sounds as it rushes through the air to strike the condemned criminal."

"If your conscience is clear, as I am not afraid," he added, joggling along complacently, though now and again making profound obeisances to the mighty thunder god.

Montrose attempted to explain to him the true cause of these atmospheric disturbances, but he only smiled with disdainful incredulity and was commencing to argue in favour of his own absurd theory when the discussion was rudely interrupted by a terrific downpour of rain and hail.

Fortunately, they were each provided with a large umbrella made of thick oiled paper, studded upon a light framework of bamboo, which served as a protection both against sun and rain.

The storm did not last long and greatly refreshed the surrounding vegetation; while a cool north-westerly breeze sprang up that quickly dispersed the clouds, and the sky gave every promise of a fine evening.

Cheng, who had been looking at Montrose with a mixture of awe and admiration, now turned to him with a friendly smile, and he presented to him his fellow traveller, who had turned off a little to the left to avoid coming into contact with him.

Montrose had no idea who this grave, handsome young Chinaman was; still he felt friendly towards him, and drawing rein, gave the usual salutation by asking whether he had eaten rice.

"No, I am afraid I am not," said Cheng, regarding his friend in a friendly tone.

"Oh, yes," replied Montrose in a friendly tone. "I rode all the way from Canton to Lien, and, on arriving there, received such a agreeable reception from your townspeople that I am journeying all the way back, though under no wise compulsion."

"Cheng could hardly refrain from smiling at Montrose's quiet, satirical allusion to his own terrible experience."

"Why do you missionaries expect your lives for the sake of preaching your religion to the people of China?" he asked, adding with calm assurance, "Nothing will ever change our religious convictions which form the basis of our home life."

"We come to tell of the one true God: the Father and Son and Holy Spirit," said Montrose. "But if your so-called religion forms the basis of your home life, what forms the basis of your religion?"

"Filial piety," answered Cheng which dogmatic solemnity.

"I cannot help thinking," said Montrose, "that you carry filial piety to an absurdity; for your great sage, Confucius, even recommends a son to kill himself for his father's sake."

"Filial piety is the duty of the Emperor of China upon the throne," replied Cheng with ill-concealed obsequiousness, his face flushing. "It is a far-reaching protective arm, for, after strengthening the home, it goes forth even to the Dragon Throne, and—if he be worthy of it—embraces the Emperor, who is regarded as the earthly father of all children, and the Son of Heaven. As Confucius says, 'a family is the prototype of the empire,' and thus the empire is considered by filial piety."

Cheng, who was evidently dissatisfied to Cheng, so he changed it by asking his companion to explain to him the constitution of the English Government. Montrose did so, entering into and thoroughly expounding every detail of consequences.

Cheng listened attentively and, when he had thoroughly grasped the subject, said, "I do not like your administrative system, which is founded to a great extent, upon hereditary right and precedence. In China moral and intellectual merits are the only things which will help a man to gain political fame and position; whereas it seems that the son of an English peer succeeds to his father's seat in Parliament—perhaps to the exclusion of a wiser and more competent man. Here, honours are bestowed on the basis of birth, and the son of a noble is to have posthumous titles conferred on him by his ancestors for several generations, and notwithstanding the power and wealth my father might possess, I could never gain official standing otherwise than by my own rectitude and perseverance in studying, living correctly, and taking my degrees."

"In your country," he continued, "the poor, though wise and worthy, must remain in that sphere of life into which he was born, unless he enjoys exceptional advantages for promotion; and even then, it appears, he is handicapped from the commencement by class distinction and a proud aristocracy. On the other hand, in this country the lowly-born man—providing his family is moral and respectable—may possibly rise by his own exertions to become an Imperial Councillor, and a member of the House of Commons, for probity and learning are accorded the respect and acknowledgment due to them."

"Yes," he added, "religion and politics are inseparably united by all the traditions we hold most dear. Is it so in your country?"

"I am afraid not," said Montrose.

"Are your countrypeople all influenced by the same religious convictions?"

"Practically the same," answered Montrose, "only under various denominations."

"I mean, are you all members of one church?"

"No, our opinions differ regarding certain dogmas and ceremonies."

"That is bad," said Cheng, "for if there is religious difference, there must be political difference and party strife. Do your religious principles coincide with your scientific ones?"

"No, I am afraid they will never become reconciled to one another."

"Ah!" exclaimed Cheng, with proud conviction. "Confucianism and Buddhism are founded upon scientific principles—upon the wonderful laws of spiritual evolution—the Yang and Yin of the Tao-kiang, which embrace all things, even the atoms of dust upon which we tread. With us, religion is our political ruler, and Confucius may well be called our invisible Prime Minister."

Montrose was much interested in the conversation, as it revealed to him the workings of the Chinaman's mind; but he reserved his arguments for another time, hoping to become better acquainted with the young student, in which case his words would have more weight and would be listened to with less prejudice.

At mid-day they rested awhile beneath the drooping foliage of a banyan tree, and Montrose drew from his satchel some rice-cakes, and handed a couple to Cheng, who was about to take them, when Ah Sam, regarding the foreigner with angry suspicion, cried out, "Don't touch those cakes!"

"Whereupon Cheng drew back his hand, at the same time making a polite excuse."

After some light refreshment, the travellers mounted their ponies and pushed on at a brisk pace, for heavy clouds were rising from the southward, threatening a tropical storm, and the nearest town of Yang-chau was some miles ahead.

The light wind gradually died away, being succeeded by a period of oppressive calm, and the atmosphere became thick and heavy; while the voices of birds, the lively scissor-grinding of cinders, and the deep bass notes of bullfrogs became hushed, as if they awaited in expectant silence the impending storm.

Our friends had not proceeded far, however, when a sudden flash of lightning lit up the sky, and was followed by a tremendous clap of thunder, like the hurrying of a host. Then a succession of flashes and crashes rent the sulphurous air.

Montrose noticed that at every report Cheng reverentially bowed his head low over his horse's neck; and, on asking him the reason of this, he replied: "I do this to pay proper homage to the God of Thunder. He, even, is offended with some person in this neighbourhood who has secretly committed a crime, and he, as he is surely being struck; for the gods always avenge the hidden wrong against heaven."

"You speak," said Montrose, "as if the thunder killed, and not the lightning."

"And so it does," said Cheng, with a look of pitying contempt for this foreigner's ignorance. "The Goddess of Lightning throws a flash from her mirror upon the guilty wretch, thus revealing his whereabouts to the God of Thunder, who at once casts his destroying bolts which makes those terrible sounds as it rushes through the air to strike the condemned criminal."

"If your conscience is clear, as I am not afraid," he added, joggling along complacently, though now and again making profound obeisances to the mighty thunder god.

Montrose attempted to explain to him the true cause of these atmospheric disturbances, but he only smiled with disdainful incredulity and was commencing to argue in favour of his own absurd theory when the discussion was rudely interrupted by a terrific downpour of rain and hail.

Fortunately, they were each provided with a large umbrella made of thick oiled paper, studded upon a light framework of bamboo, which served as a protection both against sun and rain.

The storm did not last long and greatly refreshed the surrounding vegetation; while a cool north-westerly breeze sprang up that quickly dispersed the clouds, and the sky gave every promise of a fine evening.

Cheng, who had been looking at Montrose with a mixture of awe and admiration, now turned to him with a friendly smile, and he presented to him his fellow traveller, who had turned off a little to the left to avoid coming into contact with him.

Montrose had no idea who this grave, handsome young Chinaman was; still he felt friendly towards him, and drawing rein, gave the usual salutation by asking whether he had eaten rice.

Cheng answered shortly though politely, plainly showing, however, that he was not inclined to be communicative, while Ah Sam kept close to his master and suspiciously eyed the intruder. "But Montrose was accustomed to these proud and haughty Celestials," and rather admired the young fellow for his manly, independent bearing.

"May I inquire," said Montrose, speaking in Cantonese, "what your honorable name is?"

"My humble name is Hung Fong Cheng," answered our precocious friend, not returning the compliment by inquiring the name of his interrogator.

"I presume you are a native of Lien?" said Montrose, regarding his companion attentively.

"Yes, sir," responded Cheng with great dignity.

"Are you travelling far?"

"To Canton."

"Then we are both bound to the same place," said Montrose cheerily. "Have you been there before?"

"No? I have not."

"Then you are not acquainted with the route?"

"No, I am afraid I am not," said Cheng, regarding his friend in a friendly tone.

"Oh, yes," replied Montrose in a friendly tone. "I rode all the way from Canton to Lien, and, on arriving there, received such a agreeable reception from your townspeople that I am journeying all the way back, though under no wise compulsion."
